THE GOLDEN COIN. A STORY OF HAPPY NEW YEAR.

s the morning of a new year that had set in, golden, and beautiful. The sun glistened relled raiment, in the cloudless sky. The raiment, in the cloudless sky. The of the slivery sounds of the bells, struck joyn the listener's tear, in every street. The cold, though not piercing,—bracing, though g; just cold enough, in truth, to diffuse life icity into every one that moved. was a little girl—a child of poverty, on that r's morning—walking the streets with the d that swept past her. Her little feet had p numb, encased only in thin shoes, and y worn, that she could with difficulty move the other. Her cheeks shook at every step and her lips looked truly purple. oor Elsie Grey! She was a little beggar!

ke the old year, was the new year, to her. the last year's wants, and the last year's were the wants and sufferings of this. of the years brought no change in her with it. She was poor, her mother was a d an invalid, and the child was a poor beggar. old and cheerless room gleamed no bright niversary. No evergreens, no wreaths, no we a few old withered ones, decked her walls. There was no sound of merry thin the door to say to the widow Grayppy New Year to you, Mrs. Gray." seemed to have walled her and her abode in the happiness that was the world's on that day of the year. It had provided, to all apces, no congratulations, no laughter, no flow-them,—Why? Were they outcasts? Had atraged their claims on the wide world's char-Had they voluntarily shut themselves out from nlight of the living creatures around them? ame take the world that it must be answered

m. Mrs. Gray was poor.

Elsie stopped at times and breathed her hot apon her blue and benumbed fingers, and ther tiny feet in their casements with all the tiny reet in their casements with all the in them, and then big tears stood trembling large blue eyes for a moment colled slown her purple cheeks, as if they would freeze to She had left her mother in bed, sick, exhaust ad famishing. What wonder that she cried, hough those hot tears dripped on the cold pave. They might as well fall there as elsewhere; human hearts that passed her were full as would have turned back to go home, had she gain thought of her poor mother-and on she though where she knew not. She was to bestreet beggar. Where should street beggars ets are laid out and named and numed for them? Surely, if not home, then where was this thought that brought those crystal young boy-a bright looking little fellow ced to pass her, as she walked and wept, and bed. He caught the glitter of those tears in the shine, and the sight smote his angel heart. He w not what want and suffering were. He had er known them himself-never once heard of them knew not even what a real beggar was. He stop-suddenly before Elsie, and asked her the cause of e tears. he could not answer—her heart was too full. Itas any one hurt you?" asked the feeling little Chrough street, lane, and alley, she guided him. They reached the door of the hovel. The cold breath of the wind, whistled in the cracks and crevices and key-holes before them, as if inviting them in. They entered. A sick woman feebly raised her head from the pillow, and gave a sweet smile.

"Elsie, have you come," she faintly said.

"Yes mother," answered the child, "and I have brought this boy with me. I do not know who he is, but he said he wanted to come and see where we live.

od I do wrong to bring him, mother?" "No, my child," said the mother, "if he knows low to pity you from his little heart; but he cannot pity me yet—he is not old enough."

The bright-faced, sun g-hearted boy gazed in astoishment upon the nother and child. The scene as new to him. He wondered if this was what they alled poverty. His eyes looked sad upon the wasting auther, but they glittered with wonder when turned hward Elsie. Suddenly they filled with tears. The want and woe—the barrenness, the desolation, were all too much for him. He shuddered at the cold, overed floor. He gazed mournfully into the fireplace. His eyes wandered wonderingly over the maked walls, looking so uninvitingly and cheerless. Putting his hand into his pocket, he grasped the coin his mother that morn had given him, and drew "You may have that," said he, holding it out to

"Oh, you are too good! You are very generous, fear," as if she ought not to take it from him.
"Mother will give me another if I want it," he id. "It will do you a great deal of good, and I do need it," and he was instantly gone. It was a gold coin of the value of five dollars.

Mother and child wept together. Then they talked of the good boy whose heart had opened for them on this new year's day. Then they let their fancies run and grow wild and revel as they chose. They looked at the glistening piece. There was bread and fael, and clothing, and every comfort in its depths. They continued to gaze upon it. Now they saw within its rim, pictures of delight and joy; visions of long rooms, all wreathed and decorated with visions of evergreens and flowers; visions of smiling faces, ad happy children; sights of merry voices, and the chiming music bells, the accent of innocent tongues, and the laugh of gladsome hearts. Ah, what a philosopher's stone was that coin. How it turned everything first into gold, and then into happiness. How it grouped around kind and cheerful friends, and likel their accent in the state of the all hours of that day with evergreens, and full blown with merry guests, and those guests, too, all satiswith merry guests, and those guests, too, all satisfied and happy.

Oh, what bright rays shone forth from that trifling oin of gold! Could it have been as bright in the child's or man's dark pocket? No; else it had before then burnt its way through, and lent its radiance to others. Could it have shone with such visions in the

th man's hands? No; else his avarice would have herosity. No, no; it was only to the widow and er child, that it wore such a shine, and emitted such illiant rays, and revealed such sweet and welcome sions: Only for such as they.

That night, returned this angel boy to the bleak louse, filled with happiness and lighted with joy; but is was not alone, his mother was with him. Blessed by! He passed the whole of New Year's day in making others happy. And how much happier was be himself? How his little heart warmed and glowed to see the child uncover the basket he had brought with him, and take out one oy one, the gifts which were stowed there; and how overjoyed was he to see his mother offer the sick woman work, a new home, and to see the sick woman grow suddenly strong, and himost weil under the influence of kind offers. He wondered if their happiness could possibly be as deep as his own, if their New Year was as bright to them as his was to him. He knew not how any one could be happier than he was at that moment.

Years have rolled away into the silent past. That little girl—Elsie Gray—is a lady. Not a lady only in name, but one in every deed, in heart, and conduct. She dwells in a suburban cottage, and her husband is described.

husband is devoted only to her.

The husband is no other than the generous boy, who, on the New Year's festival, accosted her so ten-derly in the street, and went home with her. Her poor mother sleeps quietly in the church-yard, yet she lived to know that God had provided for her child child. She died resigned and happy.

To the Farmer and Dealers in Agricultural Implements. Agricultural Impreciate the state of facilities not heretofore possessed by any in this state for manufacturing Agricultural Implements, I beg leave to announce that I am now property under way with that business. I employ none but the best and most experienced mechanics, and work no material but the best. In this way I hope to promote the interest of the good mechanic, the Interest of the farmer, the interest of our young and growing Agricultural State, and at the same time that interest which is foremost with all mankind—self. I have had twenty years' experience in the manufacturing business; I established the first shop, and made the first state plow in the State of Wisconsin, in the dawn of her day of great agricultural improvement. I also made the first Reaping and Mowing machine, and the first steel plow ever made in this State. Therefore, with my experience and a knowledge of the waste of the country, (which are different from most others.) I feel confident that I can and will do much for the interest of the agricultural improvement of our State. I design, and have under way, the manufacturing of 1500 CAST STEEL CALIFORNIA DEEP TILLER OF

1500 CAST STEEL CALIFORNIA DEEP TILLER OR QUEEN OF THE WEST PLOWS.

The mould board, the landside and shear are manufactured of cast steel, making the plow run much lighter than any plow ever used in this country. Also, GANG PLOWS, CULTIVATORS, HARROWS, FANS MILLS, 4c., 4c.
In addition to what I manufacture, I shall constantly be receiving implements from the best makers of the Eastern and Western States, amongst which are 500 CINCINNATI EAGLE STEEL & ROVER PLOWS.

Please favor me with a call and see for yourself, and be convinced that I am publishing no humbug, but simply facts as they are, and that our young State can within itself already provide the farmer with implements inferior to none now in use.

Any article I manufacture will have all the latest improvements, and be finished in a workmanlike manner.

All kinds of agricultural implements and machines repaired on short notice, and in the best manner, and on reasonable terms.
